London, Paddington - Tapping into the City - Nathan Hartley - 60' - immersive, listening

Meeting point - 2pm Sunday 27 August at benches overlooking the amphitheatre at Sheldon Square, London, W2 6PY. Nearest tube: Paddington.

Come and join in this live art piece - a group walk as part of artist Nathania Hartley's Tapping Into The City project - looking at our movements through private-public space in the city, the impact of urban surroundings on us and our relations with each other.

For this edition we'll explore the Paddington Waterside developments - one of the largest areas of regeneration in central London.

Nathania will explain the piece and then we'll walk together for an hour or so, simply moving as one through the city space, listening to its sound and the sound of our feet. The walk will be simultaneously silenced (walking without speaking) and amplified (with pennies stuck to our shoe soles).

Bring pennies if you have any spare, but extra materials will be provided. If you don't want to customise your shoes that's fine, just wear a comfortable pair that you think may make a bit of a sound.

Free, all welcome!
